Stay, stay, my lord archbishop, stay, I say: I have a strict command to lay on thee In thy King s name--the King this side the water. Becket. And what is that? but tell me first thy name, And show me thy authority. Gervase De Cornhelle. I will. Here is a letter from the King to thee. My lord archbishop, dost thou own this Prince To be thy King? Wilt thou obey him then, Swear unto him allegiance? Answer that! I am the Sheriff of this county Kent, To which thou comest trampling thy brethren Underfoot; and that because they did obey Their King and thine. Them thou hast dared, I say, To excommunicate, and that without The knowledge of the King--a traitor s act. The bishops he commands thee to absolve. Remove from all these good and loyal men The censures of the Church. If thou refuse, Tis at thy peril. Becket. I have a right and--Randolph De Broc (interrupting him). We come not here to argue but to act: We can compel obedience to commands. Becket. Randolph de Broc, I scorn to answer thee, Bide thou thy time, which will have come, I trow, When Antichrist shall reign. Then thou canst drink The blood of martyred saints. I do defy Thee and thy myrmidons. Randolph De Broc. Now by the eyes--Gervase De Cornhelle cutting him short). Dost thou defy me too? and set at naught In me...
