Excerpt: .good wine, my young friend, said Essendine, and good wine needs no bosh, such as you are talking now. What a fellow you are! said Owen; everything is bosh to you that is not plain and practical. Then I must think you bosh, for you are neither the one nor the other. No, my son, exuberance in you is natural, and I like to listen to it. Well, it was good wine; and how well that man in the red beard sang that song: tinued, waving his hand in the direction of the villa, I suppose you are wrapt in slumber by this time. Sleep, my little one; sleep, my pretty one, sleep! The effect of the Madeira is surprising; you are positively poetical, my dear Owen, with love and wine at once oppressed. By the way we have not spoken of Miss Fleetwood lately. What do you think of her now? I think she is the most charming girl I ever met with in my life. You like her better even than you did at first? I like her better and better every day; the more I see of her the more I am delighted with her vivacity, her beauty, her pretty ways, and her--her-- Her appreciation of you--has not that something to do with it? Perhaps it may have; it is not unnatural that it should. Mr. Essendine was silent for a moment, puffing at his cigar. Then he said: Look here,...
